He is responsible for customer relations, acquiring bid opportunities, estimating/establishing production rates, project manager, quality assurance/safety management, obtaining engineering judgments when necessary and education and training of employees.

Prior to Alan's employment at PCI Atlanta, the branch was solely focused on mechanical insulation. Along with developing a customer base, Alan has developed production rates, educated fire marshals, architects and others in the construction industry of the need for this scope of work to be performed correctly by Specialty Firestop Contractors. PCI is heavily involved in firestop across the country including nuclear, industrial and commercial construction.

Alan has worked in firestopping for the past 18 years in the southeast United States and has had the opportunity to be trained by several of the founding members of the FCIA organization. Firestopping has been his primary focus for all these years and along with others in the area, has seen it become a 'trade' within our region instead of just an afterthought.

Alan is a long time FCIA member and has served on the FCIA Marketing Committee for 3 years, furthering firestop within other organizations to improve the construction industry's view of life safety with regards to firestopping. Being passionate about firestopping, he would like to assist in helping steer the industry in the right direction, continuing to work the path across the country to push for single source installers while growing the education of the AHJ's to insure proper firestop installs are done by all.

Alan has firestop product manufacturer's certificates of completion for educational and training classes from Hilti, 3M and STI.

Alan has been married to Kimberly for twenty five years and they have three children, Reilly, 21, Avery, 17 and Ivey, 7. He enjoys watching his son play football as a senior in high school, seeing his daughters compete in the pageant world, shooting firearms, working on his parents farm and other fun outdoor activities.
